The second stint of the Narendra Modi government has started with a tug of war between its top leadership, particularly on whether Defence Minister Rajnath Singh or Home Minister Amit Shah would be the number two to the prime minister. Singh is the number two in the order of precedence of the council of ministers, as he was during the previous government. Shah, who has made a debut in the Cabinet, is the number three in the order of precedence.

However, on Wednesday, Prime Minister Narendra Modi reconstituted eight Cabinet committees, with Shah being the only member of the Cabinet to be on each of these panels.

According to the initial list made public on Thursday morning, Singh was a member of only two committees; he in the previous government was on six Cabinet panels. This was interpreted as Shah being the de-facto number two in the current government.

Shah, according to the initial list, headed two of these eight panels — the Cabinet committee on accommodation and more intriguingly, the cabinet committee on parliamentary affairs.

Singh, a former Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) president, was kept out not just of the committee on parliamentary affairs, which he had headed during the previous Modi government, but also from the Cabinet committee on political affairs.

Singh was included only in two panels — the cabinet committee on security by virtue of his being the defence minister and the committee on economic affairs.

Shah had succeeded Singh as president of the Bharatiya Janata Party in 2014, and has now succeeded him as the home minister. During the 2014 Lok Sabha campaign, the BJP spoke of Modi and Singh as its "jodi number one", but Shah is now increasingly seen as number two to the PM.

Sources said Singh was unhappy at the treatment meted out to him and conveyed as much to the leadership. At 10.19 pm on Thursday, the government released a revised list of members of the various committees.

Singh's name was included in four more committees. According to the revised list, Singh is now a member of not just the committees on economic affairs and security, but also a member of the Cabinet committees on political affairs, parliamentary affairs, growth and investment, and employment and skill development. Singh, and not Shah, is now the head of the Cabinet committee on parliamentary affairs.

Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman is a member of seven of the committees, barring the appointments committee, and replaces her mentor and predecessor Arun Jaitley in all these committees.

Under the Government of India's transaction of business rules, 1961, the PM is empowered to set up and reconstitute cabinet committees. Currently, there are eight such committees. These are committees on economic affairs, parliamentary affairs, political affairs, security, investment and growth, employment and skill development, appointments and accommodation.

After the amended list, Shah now heads only one instead of two panels. He heads the committee on accommodation. The PM is not a member of either the committee on parliamentary affairs or accommodation.

'My number one focus now is to generate employment'

During her second stint as the Minister for Food Processing, HARSIMRAT KAUR BADAL's priority will be to convert job seekers into job creators, she tells Subhayan Chakraborty and Nivedita Mookerji in an interview. Edited excerpts:

How is the Modi 2.0 government as opposed to the last five years?

As far as Prime Minister Narendra Modi is concerned, you can be rest assured that things will be different every time. So, it won't just be a government of continuity. In the first Cabinet meeting itself, the PM had made it clear that he didn't want a sense of lethargy. The message was that ministers must begin with new vigour, new josh, new ideas.

Is there any specific direction that the PM has given to the ministers?

The overall direction is that all ministries should look at the last mile, and then everything else will fall in place.

The PM now wants 5-year plans from ministers, apart from the 100-day agenda that they have prepared. Does that change things?

This is a good thing. One, we are going to look at what were our goals in the manifesto and make sure they get delivered. The other thing is to have a clear vision when you start off.

What is your main focus this time?

After going around canvassing for the past three months, I knew that job is the number one concern. Food processing is one of the largest generators of employment. We had focused on building infrastructure for the past five years and now my number one focus is to generate employment.

Is there any action plan for job creation?

I'm aiming at rural employment. Punjab is one of the most affluent states but even for the son a farmer, farming is not viable any more. Things must be much worse in other states. My rough plan is to have training cum processing centres in every district where people bring what is grown in that area. There's an infrastructure which people can use to add value to what they're already growing in the field. The product is packed, processed and labelled and then has to be an outlet where it can be sold. At the same time, one has to see how the retail outlets I have brought in through the FDI in multi brand food can be linked to this, so that a chain is made.

How will it generate jobs?

A farmer can keep using these common facilities. After five to six years, he will be confident enough to take a grant from one of the existing schemes and open a business himself, and then he can become a job giver, rather than a job seeker. I also have a World Bank scheme — the Gram Samridhhi Yojana — on which we had worked on for the last two years and hopefully would get cleared in a few days. The scheme targets small farmers to offer subsidy.

Is there anything left to be done in the food policy space to attract foreign investments?

I will take it up afresh with Piyush-ji (Commerce Minister Piyush Goyal). I genuinely believe there can't be a better thing than videshi paisa for swadeshi infrastructure (foreign investment for India's infrastructure), because the government can't do everything.

With Amit Shah presiding over meetings with senior ministers and being inducted into all key cabinet committees, is there a perception that there are multiple power centres now?

The power centre is still the PM, there are no two ways about that. Everybody comes under him. But if he has got more people to help him and make the government more efficient, effective and faster, I think that's very good.

What is the woman power like in this council of ministers?

As long as PM Modi is there, the woman power would always be very high... He's broken the glass ceiling and given positions to women that have not been held earlier by a woman — be it a finance minister or an external affairs minister.

What's your expectation from the Union Budget?

The one on July 5 will be more about balancing what was already there in the interim Budget. The focus is on the Budget next year.

Does it help to have a woman finance minister, who's also your neighbour?

I think being a neighbour has nothing to do with it (laughs). The PM has taken a decision, and I'm sure it's a very wise decision. Nirmala Sitharaman is very competent. She's done a good job in both Defence and Commerce, and she'll do a good job as FM too.

SAIL pitches for better environment management in steel plants and mines

Steel Authority of India Limited (SAIL) pitches for better environment management in its steel plants and mines. Environment Management Division (EMD) - the nodal agency of SAIL regularly monitors different parameters to ensure a clean environment in the SAIL's operating units.

In last five years EMD ensured 15% reduction of Particulate Matter (PM) emission to improve the air quality at SAIL Steel Plants. EMD is working on projects to reduce Carbon-di-Oxide (CO2) footprint, which results in reduction of Specific CO2 emission by almost 3% in last 5 years. SAIL is intensively working on technology development to mitigate emission effects in environment. On the occasion of World Environment Day 2019 EMD reaffirms its commitment for better environment. This year's World Environment Day theme is 'Air Pollution'. In line with that EMD carried out various awareness development programmes for mass, especially for the under privileged children in villages. Tableau carrying messages to stop air pollution is presented in different strategic locations in Kolkata for awareness of public in general.
