PLANS TO MOVE X & SPACEX TO TEXAS

Musk's 'final straw' moment marks his political conversion

Musk has already relocated himself and Tesla to Texas

ELIYAHU KAMISHER, DANA HULL & JULIE FINE July 17

ELON MUSK IS going all in on right-wing politics.

In a matter of days, the billionaire entrepreneur has ramped up his embrace of the conservative movement, formally endorsing Donald Trump for president and using his X platform to repeatedly amplify his support.

He's donating $45 million a month to a pro-Trump super PAC, tapping his vast fortune to influence the race.

And on Tuesday, Musk's political leanings spilled over to two of his most prominent companies, with an announcement that he plans to move X and SpaceX to Texas from California. The "final straw," he said, was a new rule in the Golden State that bans school districts from requiring teachers to notify parents about changes to a student's sexual orientation and gender identity.

Musk has for years been aligning himself with conservative causes such as vaccine skepticism and stopping illegal immigration. But his full embrace of the right-wing ethos marks a radical transformation for a Silicon Valley tech legend who rose to prominence as the visionary behind Tesla, an electric-car company positioned at the forefront of the environmental movement. His latest announcement

AMPLIFYING SUPPORT

Musk's political leanings spilled over to two of his most prominent companies, with an announcement that he plans to move X and SpaceX to Texas from California

■ For years, Musk has been aligning himself with conservative causes such as vaccine skepticism and stopping illegal immigration

■ His full embrace of the right-wing ethos marks a radical transformation for a Silicon Valley tech legend

■ Texas, a deeply Republican state with no corporate or personal income tax, has wooed California firms in recent years signals a new type of backlash from the billionaire, said Thad Kousser, a professor of political science at the University of California, San Diego.

"This is qualitatively different from both what we've seen from other businesses and even what we've seen from Musk before," he said. "It's entirely on social policy, and if he follows through it would represent a new worry for California policymakers."

For California, the world's fifth-largest economy, the relocations may be more of a symbolic than substantive blow. Musk has already relocated himself and Tesla to Texas. Yet, few employees were compelled to move, and the car company still maintains a huge presence in the San Francisco Bay area, including a factory in Fremont that employs thousands of people. Just last year, Musk and Governor Gavin Newsom announced that Palo Alto would be home to Tesla's engineering headquarters.

Newsom responded to Musk's move on Tuesday by posting a Truth Social message from Trump in which the former president said the billionaire would have dropped to his knees to get subsidies for his many projects. Newsom's comment: "You bent the knee."

Texas, a deeply Republican state with no corporate or personal income tax, has attracted California companies, including Oracle, Hewlett Packard Enterprise and Charles Schwab in recent years. On the floor of the Republican National Convention in Milwaukee on Tuesday, local politicians crowded at Musk's move. —BLOOMBERG

In some years, Indians may be playing each other for world title, says Anand

EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE Chennai, July 17

THE RAPID STRIDES made by Indian prodigies on the battlefield of the 64 squares makes five-time world champion Viswanathan Anand believe that there may soon be a situation where two Indians are playing against each other for the world champion's crown.

"They could easily be each other's rivals (at the World Chess Championship) in some years," Anand predicted at the Express Adda in Chennai on Tuesday, where he was the guest of honour with wife, Aruna, and India's top-ranked chess player, Arjun Erigaisi. The trio was in conversation with Anant Goenka, Executive Director, The Indian Express Group, and Amit Kamath, Assistant Editor, The Indian Express.

"This current Indian generation of chess players is so close to the top that they're sniffing most things. Obviously, playing with the highest stakes (at the world championship) is an experience you have to encounter in a very raw fashion to figure (out what the pressure there is like)," he said.

Anand, the country's first grandmaster, spearheaded a chess revolution in the country that has seen three Indians — Arjun Erigaisi (World No 4), D Gukesh (World No 7) and R Praggnanandhaa (World No 8) — find a spot in the current top 10 ranks. Gukesh will challenge Ding Liren for the world champion's crown later this year. If he manages to wrest the title from the Chinese grandmaster, he will become the youngest world champion.

India's imprint in chess is also growing, with an India-powered Global Chess League providing a team-based twist to what was an individualistic sport.

Chess legend Viswanathan Anand, wife Aruna and top player Arjun Erigaisi at Express Adda in Chennai

AMIT CHAKRAVARTY

"Indians are enjoying lots of sports now. But we like imposing our own business model on it. We want something new. That's why we had the Global Chess League last year, which was this new Indian way of organising sport," Anand said.

"Overall, I would say that it's much easier to be a sports person in India today than it was 20 years ago. Now you get so much support, for training, for equipment and from the audience."

Asked if he sees a reflection of himself and his "nice guy" image reflected in the next generation of Indian players, Anand replied: "They have seen me growing up and maybe that played a part. But to be honest, they came pre-heated like that. The age difference is so much that they would call me 'sir' all the time."

"Sometimes, it's seven times in the same sentence. It feels awkward. I tried to get them to stop once, and they asked, 'would you like to be called uncle?' They're just very well brought up."

"I have not played them a lot recently. I played Praggnanandhaa in a match six years ago. I played Gukesh last year. It's occasional. Even at events, they're very polite, but not on the board. They're very competitive on the board. I like that they can separate the aggression there. They come to the board wanting to really beat you, whoever you are. After the game, they go back to being incredibly polite," Anand said.

Aruna, who has been Anand's manager for decades, also spoke about the change in mindset that is now apparent in the sport. As Anand's manager, she would find herself constantly in a battle of wits with FIDE, the global governing body of chess, and the entourage of other top grandmasters.

"The world is now more accepting of a woman taking on a role. When I started, I would constantly be questioned: 'as a woman, do you know this?' or 'you're just the wife'. But now, nobody really questions your gender anymore. But in 2010 and 2011, most of the times, I would be the only woman in the room with 50 men. Anand used to make fun of me and say, 'Have you seen these big Hollywood type guys?'"

"They'll have little bodyguards and then a huge looking man. And you have to be scared of the little man, because that man bites! That's why I married you! You're that little man!"

Asked about the secret to working with one's spouse in a professional setting, Aruna said: "It's based on trust really. Anand travels a lot, so I have to do a lot of heavy hand-holding at home. Our son is just entering his teenage years. So Anand knows that when he gets back home, he has to step up because, more than me, our son Akhil has missed him."

"Being aware of these things is very important. And mostly, it works on trust. It doesn't work on gender-specific roles. It's just that when we take a decision, we understand that it's a common decision that works for both of us. Truth be told, in our relationship, I'm the only one who loses her temper. Anand loses his temper but it disappears in a second. I lose my temper and it's a three-day thing. He has to work very hard after that."
