US agency prepares to hand over internet oversight to FTC

DAVID SHEPARDSON
Washington, 12 December

The US Federal Communications Commission plans to turn over oversight of internet service providers to other federal agency as it plans to vote on Thursday to revoke the landmark 2015 "net neutrality" rules.

FTC Chairman Ajit Pai last month unveiled plans to repeal the rules that prohibit internet service providers from impeding consumer access to web content. The 2015 rules bar broadband providers from blocking or slowing access to web content.

Ajit Pai had proposed last month to repeal rules that prohibit ISPs from impeding consumer access to web content agencies said the proposal will "return jurisdiction to the FTC to police the conduct of ISPs." Pai said Monday in a statement the agencies "will work together to take targeted action against bad actors." Under Pai's proposal, the agreement "is a confusing, lackluster, reactionary afterthought; an attempt to paper over weaknesses in the chairman's draft proposal repealing the FCC's 2015 net neutrality rules." The FTC will investigate if internet providers fail to make accurate disclosures or if they engage in deceptive or unfair acts or practices. "The FTC is committed to ensuring that internet service providers live up to the promises they make to consumers," said Acting FTC Chairman Maureen Ohlhausen.

FCC Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel, a Democrat, said "FTC involvement would be prolonging the fact — many months, if not years, after consumers and businesses have been harmed." Chris Lewis, vice president of advocacy group Public Knowledge, said the FCC is "joining forces with the FTC to say it will only act when a broadband provider is deceiving the public. This gives free reign to broadband providers to block or throttle your broadband service as long as they inform you." Democrats and net neutrality advocates plan a series of protests ahead of Thursday's vote.

Pai's proposal has already won the backing of the three Republicans on the five-member commission. The reversal represents a victory for big internet providers such as AT&T, Comcast Corp and Verizon Communications Inc that opposed the 2015 rules.

Pai's proposal is opposed by large internet companies including Alphabet and Facebook. The new rules are expected to take effect in January and draw court challenges. REUTERS

AIG launches new cyber threat analysis

SUZANNE BARIYIN
12 December

American International Group has ramped up its analysis for insuring against cyberattacks, using a system that scores a company's risk of having a breach along with safeguards it has in place, the insurer said on Tuesday.

AIG's underwriters have been using the computerized analysis since November, which combines information from a new insurance application designed for the process and data about current cyber threats to generate scores on various related factors, said Tracie Grella, AIG's global head of Cyber Risk Insurance, in an interview.

The analysis scores companies on the degree to which a cyber attack may affect their businesses and the potential costs of various cyber incidents, among other factors, according to a sample report seen by Reuters.

Cyber coverage is a mounting concern worldwide as hackers increasingly target companies' technology systems. Insurers are also struggling to estimate their potential exposure as cyber risks and interest in coverage increase.

In October, AIG said it would review all coverage types to better gauge its exposure to cyber risk. Other policies, such as for property and commercial vehicles, are often silent on whether cyber events are covered, leaving insurers without a clear picture of their total financial exposure. AIG on Tuesday also announced a partnership with cybersecurity companies CrowdStrike Inc and Darktrace to launch CyberMatics, a service that verifies information AIG receives from customers' cyber security tools, Grella said.

The service uses artificial intelligence, or the ability of machines to carry out tasks normally associated with human intelligence, to look inside an insured company's network for strengths and vulnerabilities, she said.

"They may be good at identifying spear phishing attacks but not internal threats," said Eagan, referring to email attacks against organizations and individuals in which perpetrators try to gain access to sensitive information. Companies need not use the service, but those who do may be able to negotiate more favorable policy terms, Grella said.

AIG's new analysis does not change cyber insurance rates, but could affect how it calculates a company's premium because of added insights it into risks and mitigation efforts, Grella said.

AIG's analysis also generates cyber-risk reports for customers that include the same information its underwriters use. Companies can also compare their scores with those of their

Facebook to book advertising revenue locally

JULIA FIORETTI
Brussels, 12 December

Social media giant Facebook said on Tuesday it would start booking advertising revenue locally instead of re-routing it via its Irish headquarters in Dublin although the move is unlikely to result in it paying much more tax.

Corporate taxation has become a hot-button topic in the wake of revelations of tax avoidance schemes by multinationals which have led to calls for companies to pay more tax while Europe has begun exploring options for taxing digital giants.

Facebook Chief Financial Officer Dave Wehner said the company had decided to move to a local selling structure in countries where it has an office to support sales to local advertisers.

"In simple terms, this means that advertising revenue supported by our local teams will no longer be recorded by our international headquarters in Dublin, but will instead be recorded by our local company in that country," Wehner said in a blog post.

"We believe that moving to a local selling structure will provide more transparency to governments and policy makers around the world who have called for greater visibility over the revenue associated with locally-supported sales in their countries."

The European Commission is working on legislative proposals, expected in March, to increase taxes on multinational digital companies, who are accused of paying too little in the EU by booking profits in low tax countries where they have their EU headquarters, like Ireland and Luxembourg. Among the options the EU executive is considering to quickly raise taxes on tech giants is a levy on revenues from advertising activities, according to an EU document published in September.

Wehner said Facebook would implement the change throughout 2018 and aim to complete by the first half of 2019. REUTERS
