Facebook hires ex-deputy prime of UK Clegg to lead lobbying

BLOOMBERG
21 October

Facebook hired Nick Clegg, Britain's former deputy prime minister, to run its lobbying efforts, as governments around the world debate how best to regulate the social media giant. As leader of the Liberal Democrats, Clegg was at the heart of the British government from 2010 to 2015. He's also a former member of the European Parliament who knows his way around the institutions of the European Union.

Clegg's hire comes as Facebook is under fire from regulators, politicians and authorities around the world on issues ranging from user privacy breaches, to the proliferation of fake news and hate speech on its platforms. He speaks French, Dutch and German.

Bringing a former local politician on board could especially help the Silicon Valley giant in the UK, where it is under investigation for letting the data of millions of users end up in the hands of Cambridge Analytica, a consulting firm that worked on Donald Trump's 2016 US presidential campaign.

In an example of the kind of scrutiny Facebook is now coming under, the UK Parliament's Culture Committee on Saturday released details of what it said was an anonymous political campaign to reject Prime Minister Theresa May's Brexit plan. The Committee said it found evidence that more than 250,000 pounds ($327,000) had been spent on targeted ads pushing for a harder Brexit.

The committee said it was impossible to tell who was behind the campaign. Facebook said that, as of November 7, all advertisers will have new requirements before they can place political ads in the UK "We know we can't prevent election interference alone and offering more ad transparency allows journalists, researchers and other interested parties to raise important questions," the company said in a statement.

On his Facebook page, Clegg wrote: "The conspiracy which brings Facebook's app large. I hope I will be vice president and Communic
