MERKEL-PUTIN MEET

Angela Merkel, Putin share a headache: Donald Trump

The background to this meeting includes Trump's announcement that he plans to impose sanctions on Russia

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Frankfurt, August 17

GERMAN CHANCELLOR ANGELA Merkel and Russian President Vladimir Putin will have plenty to talk about when they meet Saturday — thanks in no small part to US President Donald Trump, whose sanctions and criticism over trade, energy and NATO have created new worries for both leaders.

The two will meet at the German government's guest house outside Berlin and will give short statements beforehand but aren't planning a news conference, German officials said.

Government spokesman Steffen Seibert has said that topics will include the civil war in Syria, the conflict in Ukraine, and energy questions.

Putin is facing the possibility of more US sanctions on Russia imposed by Trump, and has an interest in softening or heading off any European support for them. Meanwhile, while both countries want to move ahead with the Nord Stream 2 gas pipeline — roundly criticised by Trump as a form of Russian control over Germany.

Stefan Meister, a Russia expert at the German Council on Foreign Relations, said that there is "an increased interest on both sides to talk about topics of common interest" and that, in part because he shifted focus from earlier meetings that focused on Russanctions could take effect 90 days later if Russia does not certify it is no longer using chemical weapons and allow on-site inspections.

Russia has denied involvement in the poisoning. Meister said that Putin can use the meeting to "send a signal to Washington that there are allies with the US that still do business with Russia".

Beyond that, he can push for Germany and the European Union not to support further sanctions, particularly a second round that might hit businesses working with the Nord Stream 2 project.

The project would add another natural gas pipeline under the Baltic Sea, to bypass more Russian gas, to bypass Ukraine and Poland. Trump has criticised Nord Stream 2 and the gas supplies, saying Germany is "totally controlled" by Russia by being dependent on the energy.

Trump's criticism was linked to his push for other NATO member countries, particularly Germany, to pay a bigger share of the cost of NATO's common defence.

From her end, Merkel will push for a Russian commitment to keep at least some gas transiting Ukraine, which earns transit fees from it.

Putin has said he's open for shipments to continue if Ukraine settles a gas dispute with Russia.

Germany also has a strong interest in seeing some of the Syrian refugees in Germany return home in any settlement of the civil war in their home country, and could seek Russia's support for that with President Bashar Assad.

Russia has backed Assad with military force. Putin has pushed Germany and other Western nations to help rebuild Syria's economy ravaged by more than seven years of civil war, arguing that it would help encourage refugees from Syria to return home, easing the pressure on Europe.

Merkel's decision to allow in a flood of refugees in 2015 led to a backlash against her immigration policy and boosted the anti-immigration Alternative for Germany party.

Both Germany and Russia have expressed a desire to maintain the agreement with Iran to limit its nuclear programme in return for easing some economic sanctions.

Trump has pulled the US out of the programme and imposed new sanctions, saying that they will also hit foreign countries that keep doing business with Iran.

The discount airline model is coming for Europe's rlys

BLOOMBERG
August 17

WITH EVER MORE passengers opting for low-cost carriers such as Ryanair and EasyJet, Europe's old-guard airlines have been shaken to their core — forced to slash prices, stick passengers with fees for everything from baggage to beer, and in some cases even declare bankruptcy.

Soon, rail operators such as France's SNCF and Germany's Deutsche Bahn could face a similar shake-up as Europe pushes for competition in passenger train service.

Lower fares could attract "millions of new passengers", says Jacques Gounon, chief executive officer of Getlink, the company formerly known as Euro-tunnel that manages the English Channel Tunnel.

Getlink already runs a car-and-truck shuttle through the tunnel and is considering a discount high-speed service that would challenge Eurostar International, which now offers the only high-speed passenger service through the tunnel, with fares often topping £400 ($510) for a London-Paris round trip. "We're convinced the demand is there" for a lower-priced alternative, Gounon says.

The European Union has ordered countries to open all commercial train services to competition by 2020 — and experience says that's likely to have a dramatic effect.

As Nvidia expands in artificial intelligence, Intel defends turf

REUTERS
August 17

NVIDIA DOMINATES CHIPS for training computers to think like humans, but it faces an entrenched competitor in a major avenue for expansion in the artificial intelligence chip market: Intel.

Nvidia chips dominate the AI training chip market, where huge amounts of data help algorithms "learn" a task such how to recognise a human voice, but one of the biggest growth areas in the field will be deploying computers that implement the "learn't" tasks.

Intel dominates data centres where such tasks are likely to be carried out.

"For the next 18 to 24 months, it's very hard to envision anyone challenging Nvidia on training," said Jon Coathgate, analyst and tech sector co-lead at Janus Henderson Investors.

But Intel processors already are widely used for taking a trained artificial intelligence algorithm and putting it to use, for example by scanning incoming audio and translating that into text-based requests, what is called "inference".

Tencent slump shows what happens when Beijing flips the switch

BLOOMBERG
Hong Kong, August 17

CHINA LONG CELEBRATED Tencent Holdings as a national champion. Now, the tech giant is getting a taste of what it's like to be on the other side of government patronage.

Tencent tumbled on Thursday after reporting its first profit drop in a decade as Chinese authorities froze approval of digital games the company needs to make money. Once the most valuable company in Asia, Tencent has seen its market cap fall by more than $165 billion since January.

Tencent executives acknowledged a regulatory shake-up is interfering with the introduction of new games, then tried to reassure investors any delays would be temporary. But the lack of direct comment from Beijing left analysts questioning whether the government itself had real clarity. The company may be suffering a mere bureaucratic snafu, but it could also be planning broader restrictions on gaming, long controversial within the Communist Party.

"It's quite a big mess," said Serkan Toto, CEO of Tokyo-based game industry consultancy Kantan Games.

"The big message is, if it can happen to Tencent, it can happen to anyone."

Tencent shares rose 3% on Friday in Hong Kong.

China has an unusually restrictive approach to games, an extension of the government's tight control over the internet and media. Online, mobile and console games go through a strict, two-step process — first so they can be offered to customers, then second so companies can profit from the games.

With the government freeze, Tencent has been hampered from making money off two of the most popular games in the world — Fortnite and PlayerUnknown's Battlegrounds.
